Course Goals

The goal of this seminar is twofold: first, to introduce students to the Reichman University School of Psychology faculty and their research programs; and second to expose first-year students to the diversity of psychological research and the way researchers think and go about their work. At each meeting, a different faculty member will present one of her/his research projects. Students will take an active part in introducing the speakers and their fields of research, and will write a final paper.

Grading

Each week a different group of students will host the speaker. This includes (1) reading up about the speaker and introducing them in class, (2) reading up about the broad research domain and introducing it in class, and (3) preparing and presenting the group questions to the speaker in an interview style. These three elements will be submitted to the class instructor on the preceding Friday by 12:00 noon (see full instructions on Moodle). This will compose 10% of your final class grade.

Regular attendance in the seminar is expected, and weekly in-class assignments will compose 10% of your final grade. Make-up assignments will be provided for those who cannot attend class - please contact the class instructor for such arrangements. You can miss up to two lessons without needing to do a make-up assignment.

An individual final assignment will compose the remaining 80% of your final class grade.

Important: If you cannot attend on the day your group is hosting, it is your responsibility to switch with someone from a later group.
